Image copyright AFP Northern Ireland's first lady Diane Johnson has been charged with handling stolen goods, the BBC's Enda McClafferty in Derry says. It relates to allegations that she was involved with a northern Ireland-based convicted criminal who was in the process of selling more than 50 designer coats when he was detained. The Northern Ireland Assembly said it was "deeply concerned". Mrs Johnson, wife of Stormont's deputy first minister Martin McGuinness, has made no comment. She is due to appear in court next month. A police statement said an investigation had been launched, and that charges had been authorised. It did not provide any further details. Earlier the PSNI said officers had seized items that were taken from a stolen goods office in Belfast last year. The majority of the alleged stolen goods were coats. In a separate incident last month a raid on Mrs Johnson's home in her south Derry constituency uncovered an arsenal of weapons and ammunition. If found guilty, she would face a prison sentence of up to two years. However, she could avoid a conviction if the court accepts a guilty plea. Northern Ireland Secretary James Brokenshire said the party in power - which is yet to be formed following the death of former deputy first minister Martin McGuinness - needed to ensure Mrs Johnson was treated fairly. "The First Minister's office, in my view, has conducted itself in a responsible and appropriate manner," he added. This is my first exposure to the waypoints doodle.
